President Harding Reported To Have Determined Upon New Plan

(By Associated Press.)

CHICAGO, Aug. 5 .- Comparative calm which had been prevalent in the rail strike situation today gave way to renewed activities both for ending the walkout and making it more effective. New peace conferences are pending in Washington, as a new strike threat came from the maintenance of way men and other union workers. A conference with Harding was sought by the Big Four brotherhoods for the purpose of presenting their views of the strike. The Eastern roads sent detachments of shopmen to relief of the roads in the mining district of Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky where new outbreaks of violence have been reported.

The greatest factor in the situation, it was generaly conceded by administration spokesmen, was the implied threat of the independent brotherhoods, engineers, firemen, trainmen and conductors, to join in the tie up. In this country the activities of the airment are confined to carrying the man between a few of our large cities, and to certain training of men in the should ever get into a war, we would have to start from the bottom, if we wished to build a great air navy. It is doubtful if we would have enough for such service skilled flyers to teach large bodies of men how to fly. Such is not the case in Europe. Just now a fly-by-night service has been established between Paris and London. A person may start from London in time to get a good night's rest. In France, especially, do the people take their flying seriously. The government is setting said large sums of money for the enlargement and perfection of the French air navies.

Presumably, the French are taking no chances. In case of war they mean to be prepared to rain death from the skies upon their enemies. It was not until the closing months of the great war that the Allied flyers gained the supremcacy over the German air men; consequently the Allied armies suffered greatly for a long period.

A WOUNDED NEWSPAPER MAN WITH A VISION

Maximillian Harden, wounded perhaps unto death by German monarchists, possesses still that clear vision of truth, that has made him hated and feared by the Imperial class of Germans, ever since he attacked that class through the press, at the outbreak of the world war and until the present time. He says that he sees great danger ahead for the German nation. He says that heavy debt it owes is one menace; but he declares that right at the present time what menaces Germany most is the apparent suspicion that has arisen between England and France. Harden argues that as long as France and England mistrust each other "they will never put foundations under the republic", Harden meaning the German republic... unless outside aid comes to it, the present German republic is doomed to be destroyed by the monfears that they are about to turn to the monarch- er by its slumber. ists, and this will probably mean still more trouble for Europe and possibly the entire world. Harden says that because the war ruined France so completely, she is under the necessity of getting every bit of money possible out of the German nation.

The English do not have to have their money from Germany. They would gain much more by letting the Germans off light so they could do that much more business them. In these two fundamental differences is seen and realized the difference in attitude between the French and the from bough to bough, now crested with snow, English toward Germany at this time, with regard evidently in high glee except for the fact that to post war reperations. Harden contends valiantly against the continuation of the present gulf of distrust between England and France and declares that the good of Germany and the world at large demands that friendly relations be estab- joy the period of falling snow. In some of the older towns in the days gone by, there existed the old town hotel. No servants with white livery existed there to wait upon the guests as there is today, but there was a refinement and cleanliness which existed about these old places which riveted the attention of the guest, and made them to feel at home.

One of the big features about the old town inn, was the hospitality which existed there, and the bounteous meals of old southern cooking which abounded. The old town inn existed in the days when the feather bed was the rule. Mattresses in that day and time were not considered quite the proper thing for a night's rest and recuperation.. The office generally consisted of a large room, wherein was located a huge family fireplace, which was provided with splendid fire-wood, and around this the guests and the proprietor and his family would sit and enjoy the winter evenings.

No well regulated hostelry was considered properly equipped then, unless there was in each room a feather bed, faultlessly made and carefully looked after by the hotel landlady. Much attention was paid to the feather bed, and frequent sunnings were given it to keep its feathers sweet and clean. A night spent in repose on one of those beds, was a guarantee that the sleep would be sound, and recuperation be 100 per cent. Children of that period who are men now, vivdly remember when they were carefully tucked away in the old feather bed to dream the sweetest dreams of

When the meal was announced, a visit to the dining room revealed great dishes piled high with tempting things to eat, and the savory odor of it all filled the building and extended to the outside.

Another dish which made a reputation, and which has extended down through the years with its reputation still unimpaired, was the country style fried chicken, fried to a scrisp brown, and which no guest would ever fail to make friends with. This dish is still the pride of southern cookery, and no improvement has ever been made upon it. It stands in a class distinctly to itself.

These old hostelries existed in a period before high finance gained such headway, and the big thing with the host was to see, that none go away This country the ones that gave the fying maine to the world, seems to appreciate it least. but the best sent each guest away with nothing have the largest field of all the nations in which prietors of that period evidently went on the assumption that the quickest way to a man's heart O My Dad-Robertson-Cole-6 rls.to get the benefits of air travel. Wisdom From the Far East.

The welfare of nations and the happiness of mankind do not depend primarily on science, intelligence, glory or a government powerful abroad; they depend on labor, thrift, consideration for our neighbors and mutual helpfulness. The latter are non-material objects in life, but the most important for which we can strive, Idleness, prodigality, covetousness, tyranny-these we must root out of our hearts,-Hsu Shih-Chang.

YOUR HEALTH

How the Traveler Should Safeguard His Own Health By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

Commissioner of Health, New York City FEW weeks ago I had occasion to travel out to

A Ohio to make some addresses about health. It is remarkable what interest is being taken everywhere in this subject. More than ever before people are seeking accurate knowledge about health and disease. It is easy now to cross the continent. The modern Pullman car is a very comfortable substitute for home Every effort has been made to make travel safe and attractive. Two or three days on a train can be spent

Of course, there are health hazards associated with from every part of the world and from all sorts of OPELAND homes. Not every such individual is a clean and sanitary companion.

The washbasine, bathtubs and toilet articles should be looked upon always as possible dangers. In this modern age it is believed that disease is carried by persons and not by things. To contract contagious or infectious sisease it is necessary to come into such intimate contact with the sick nerson as to be sprayed by the secretions of his nose and throat, or otherwise to receive the products of his body. The fresh secretions are much more dangerous than the viried secretions. The soap, the lining of the basins or tubs, and the towels may retain the moist secretions of an infected person. The washbasins, bathtubs and toilet articles should be looked upon infected person.

Remember These Points.

Never make use of a public comfort station if you can avoid it. If you do so, make sure that your own person is protected in every possible manner. Instead of using the basin, wash in the running water if you can. Cleanse the soap before you use it. By the way, leave the piece of soap clean after you have finished with it. The surest mark of good breeding is found in the soap receptacle. If it is dirty and the soap is covered with dried lather, I am suspicious of the cleanliness of that establishment.

Fortunately, liquid soap or soap pow-tablishment.

Fortunately, liquid soap or soap powders are employed almost universally in public nlaces, and this should be the rule. Likewise, the dangers of the common towel are avoided by the use of paper and incividual towels.

The traveler gets thirsty. He takes a chance every time he gets a drink of water in a strange place. The public safety is promoted by the governmental supervision of water supplies. Most of the states demand water on the railroad trains, and the federal government supervises the water supply of the railroad cars used in interstate travel. Care is taken to get the water from approved sources, and the manner of icing the water and the conditions of the storage tank are looked after by the government.

Watch Your Diet.

Needless to say, the common drinkingcup is rarely seen these days. Tears ago in New England it was a source of sad amusement to me to see the brakeman
"pass the water" to the passengers.
When his other duties were not pressing he would carry the wooden pail along the alsle. For every thirsty passenger he dipped the single cup or "dipper" in the pall and repeated the process for the next one. The declining contents of the pall became constantly richer in germs. Thank goodness, that wort of thing is not done any more!
Paper cups have replaced the common drinking-glass.

Paper cups have reputation of inking-giass.

Not every community regulates the quality of its milk and other food supplies. The traveler runs the dapper of food poisoning. On this account he should indulge sparingly in every kind of uncooked food.

Preferable Profiles,

The left side of your face is more symmetrical than the right, but do you know why? This is perhaps due to the fact that most persons, when children, are made to sleep on the right side, which affects the soft bones, of the face. Photographers will tell you that profiles taken from the left are usually better than views from the right.

How Thackeray Was Introduced to His First American Oyster.

O man from a foreign country was ever given a warmer welcome by America than the distinguished writer and loveable character—William Makepiece Thackeray—the author of "Vanity Fair" and "The Virginians."

When he was expected to visit the United States in 1852, every one was: United States in 1852, every one was waiting with open arms to give him the time of his life.

He arrived in Boston. His friends

there had prepared a splendid program for his entertainment. Each detail had been given great thought and consider-

Some of his friends who had known him in London even remembered what he liked to eat. One of them happened to remember that Thackeray was very fond of oysters, and had boasted that our cysters were much finer and larger than the little connerv-tasting English than the little coppery-tasting English

So, on the first night of his arrival, a fine dinner was arranged for this man who by many was considered the most brilliant writer of his day. The oysters were to be the first course and his friends instructed the steward to search the markets for the very largest oysters to be found.

The chef outdid himself and the cys

The chef outdid himself and the oysters which were served were extraordinarily large and fat.

The guests assembled and went in to dinner. The gentleman in charge of the entertainment apologized for the smallness of the oysters, and said that just at that time of year they were not running particularly large. As a matter of fact, these particular specimens would have taken a prize in an oysier competition. competition.

Every one waited to see Thackeray tackle his first oyster. Air. Fields, who was present and writes of the occasion in his "Yester ays with Authors,"

"All eyes were upon him to watch the effect of a new sensation in the person of a great British author. Opening his mouth very wide, he struggled for a moment, and then all was over. I shall never forget the look of despair he cast upon the other five over-occupied shells. I broke the perfect stillness by asking him how he felt.

So pleased was Thackeray with the evening and so grateful that one day Mr. Fields met him on Beacon street with a book under his arm. When he saw Fields he held it up—it was the English edition of "Henry Esmond" just issued—and cried out:

"Here is the very best I can do, and I am carrying it to Prescott for having given me my first dinner in America. I stand by this book and am willing to leave it, when I go, as my cars."

To the Prohibitionists of Alabama

Brooks Lawrence Replies to Senator B. B. Comer

For many years I have fought side by side with Senator Comer for prohibition. I regret very much that after so many years of trusted comradship in this cause the Senator should put the dollar mark before my motives. If there is one principle for which I have steadfastly stood in Alabama, that principle is prohibition, and my adherence thereto needs no defense.

Senator Comer does not successfully challenge my exposure of Mr. Lee's anti-prohibition record. The Senator may have known Mr. Lee "since he was a little boy." Mr. Lee may have been a good little boy. But Senator Comer was at Montgomery very little during the legislative sessions of the past four years and after Mr. Lee grew up. I was there almost every day, and I again make the solemn declaration that Mr. Lee was a prominent part of an active lobby constantly to bring the brewers back into Alabama through the passage of a Bevo near-beer bill.

Political principles as such have never seemed to disturb Mr. Lee very greatly. They have only furnished him timely and opportune vehicles to transfer him to other and newer of-fices. Thus with every changing administration from Jelks to Kilby, under conditions now dry, now wet, Mr. Lee has never failed to land on his feet and to increase the percentage of his office holding record, which for continuity of time and diversity of principle is without parallel in the political history of Alabama.

My warning is to the prohibitionists of Alabama. I speak their language. I only ask that they do not lend their influ-ence to elect a man like Mr. Lee to another office and thereby continue him in a position in the state capitol for another four years where he can use the state's time and the influence of his office to continue his fight for the brewers.

If you have not already planted your fall garden, now is the time to begin planning and making preparation for it. Every wide-awake and successful farmer knows the value and help which is derived from the growing of such a garden. We should have something in the shome garden twelve months of the year.

The following suggestions may prove helpful to those interested.

The fall garden should be planted so as to provide fresh, tender vegetables through the latter half of the summer, fall and winter. Anyone can have a fall garden, if the proper kind of soil and varieties are selected and given good attention

A well drained soil of a loamy nature with a good, porous clay sub-soil underneath, should be selected for the fall garden, however, it is very important that the moisture is retained in the soil through the hot days of August and September.

The planting should be done early as it takes from ninety to one hundred and twenty days for many of the vegetables to mature.

In preparing the land for fall planting, the ground should be thoroughly broken and finely pulverized, but instead of planting in ridges, as is commonly practiced in the early spring, the fall planting should be done on the level, since by level tillage it is much easier to retain the mois-

It is advisable for most soils, that a liberal application of cow manure, or other well-rotted manure, be used, but fresh horse manure should not be used. A mixture of equal parts acid phosphate and cottonseed meal applied at the rate of 1,000 pounds to one ton per acre give good results. This must be mixed well with soil before planting the seed or setting the plants. Broad casting fertilizer for gardening is best.

Frequent cultivation is necessary to conserve moisture, maintain mellow soil and to keep down weeds and
